Therapist will discuss treatment recommendations, benefits and side effects of treatment

You have the right to ask questions about any procedure used during therapy; I will explain my approach and methods to you. If I see a child under the age of consent, all custodial parents have the right to information shared in session. Parents should be aware that exercising this right may be detrimental to the therapeutic process, and may wish to allow confidentiality between the child and the therapist.

You have the right to decide not to receive therapeutic assistance from me; if you wish, I will provide you with the name of other qualified professionals whose services you might prefer.

You have the right to end therapy at any time without moral, legal or financial obligation other than those already accrued. I ask that you contact me with that information by phone, in person or in written form.

Information revealed by you during therapy will be kept strictly confidential and will not be release to any person or agency without your written permission. In addition, when more than one family member is seen in therapy, the therapist views the family as a whole as the client. Release of information in that case requires the written consent of each family member.

There are certain situations in which I am required by law to release information obtained while in therapy to other persons or agencies without your permission. These situations are:

- a. If you threaten grave/bodily harm or death to yourself or someone else.
- b. If you reveal information relative to child abuse/neglect, elder abuse by yourself or someone else.
- c. If a court of law issues a court order.

In the event that one of these exceptions occur while we are in our group meeting, I am required by law to call the authorities.

When entering therapy, you should be aware there are both risks and benefits.

Counseling is an intensely personal process which can bring unpleasant memories or emotions to the surface. There are no guarantees that counseling will work for you. Clients can sometimes make improvements only to go backwards after a time. Progress may happen slowly. Counseling requires a very active effort on your part. In order to be most successful, you will have to work on things we discuss outside of sessions.

However, there are many benefits to counseling. Counseling can help you develop coping skills, make behavioral changes, reduce symptoms of mental health disorders, improve the quality of your life, learn to manage anger, learn to live in the present and many other advantages. A major benefit could be a better understanding of yourself, your own family of origin and behavioral patterns that have been handed down over time. Another possible benefit may be a greater ability to cope with marital, family or other interpersonal relationships.

Confidentiality and Technology

Some clients may choose to use technology in their counseling sessions. This includes but is not limited to online counseling via Skype, telephone, email, text or chat. Due to the nature of online counseling, there is always the possibility that unauthorized persons may attempt to discover your personal information. Your counselor will take every precaution to safeguard your information but cannot guarantee that unauthorized access to electronic communications could not occur. Please be advised to take precautions with regard to authorized and unauthorized access to any technology used in counseling sessions. Be aware of any friends, family members, significant others or co-workers who may have access to your computer, phone or other technology used in your counseling sessions

Therapy will seek to meet goals established by the therapist and client and usually concerns a specific presenting problem. A treatment plan will be developed that will be regularly developed and reviewed by you and the therapist and will include the presenting problem(s), measurable treatment goals and approaches.

I am aware of the clinic's involuntary discharge policy and can request a copy.

The clinic's emergency policy to obtain services after hours has been reviewed and appropriate phone numbers given to me. I am also aware of ITMC&FT grievance policy.
